ART FUGITIVE ARRESTED

In 1990, an art dealer who went by the name of Wayne Peters committed a series of consignment frauds involving eight victims and over $88,000 in losses. The crimes took place in Los Angeles, Pasadena, Santa Monica, and Laguna Beach. Peters, who drove a Maserati, took the victims' art and either failed to return the art or wrote bad checks in payment. Before he could be arrested, he fled the state. A warrant was obtained for his arrest.

Detectives later learned that his true name was Richard

Richard Kolosky, Jr.
(AKA: Wayne Peters)

Kolosky, Jr. Over the years, he had lived in Florida, Massachusetts and Illinois. The name Wayne Peters had been obtained from a newspaper obituary. Finally, the detectives were able to determine that Kolosky had returned to California and was selling cars at a BMW dealership in Beverly Hills. After surveillances of his home and work locations, the Art Theft Detail located Kolosky in March of 1998. He was arrested for five counts of grand theft and four counts of embezzlement and is currently awaiting trial.
